British Virgin Islands: Private Client

1. Which factors bring an individual within the scope of tax on income and capital gains?

There are generally no forms of income¹ or capital gains tax in the British Virgin Islands (BVI). Residence and domicile are generally not relevant to an individual's tax status in the BVI. Payroll tax is payable by individuals in the BVI in respect of actual or deemed remuneration paid (§2) and there are taxes payable on the transfer of ownership of BVI real property (§10).

The way the BVI revenue laws are structured means, in practice, that they are unlikely to affect any person which does not have a commercial operation within the territory or own BVI real estate.

Footnote(s):

¹ More accurately, there is an Income Tax Act on the statute books but it imposes a 0% income tax regime for individuals.

2. What are the taxes and rates of tax to which an individual is subject in respect of income and capital gains and, in relation to those taxes, when does the tax year start and end, and when must tax returns be submitted and tax paid?

There are no capital gains taxes in the BVI.

The BVI has a zero-rated income tax regime for individuals. However, payroll taxes are assessed on every employer and the self-employed on remuneration paid above the exempt amount (US$10,000), and a portion of the tax payable can be deducted at source from the employee. This applies to services rendered wholly or mainly in the BVI, whether or not the remuneration is paid in the BVI. Remuneration includes wages, salary and certain other benefits.

Partners in a partnership and shareholders and members of a company or association carrying on business in the BVI and who participate, otherwise than as employees, in the income of the business will be deemed employees for the purposes of payroll tax.

Depending on the size of the enterprise and operations, its payroll tax will be assessed on the employer at 10 per cent or 14 per cent of total annual remuneration paid to the employee or deemed employee; 8 per cent may be deducted from the employee at source, whereas the remainder is paid by the employer or self-employed person.

Payroll tax is generally payable within 21 days of the end of the month in which the remuneration was paid. An annual return is due within 120 days of the end of the calendar year.

In addition, employees also pay 4 per cent social security contributions whilst employers must pay 4.5 per cent (both subject to a cap). In addition, both employer and employee pay contributions toward national health insurance at a rate of 7.5 per cent of the employee's salary split equally between the employer and employee.

3. Does your jurisdiction provide advantageous tax regimes for individuals directly investing in or holding certain types of assets from an income tax or capital gains tax perspective?

The BVI is generally tax neutral with respect to income and capital gains tax: there is no capital gains tax in the BVI and income tax is zero-rated.

4. Are withholding taxes relevant to individuals and, if so, how, in what circumstances and at what rates do they apply?

There is no withholding tax.

5. How does the jurisdiction approach the elimination of double taxation for individuals who would otherwise be taxed in the jurisdiction and in another jurisdiction?

As the BVI generally imposes no payable income tax or capital gains tax there is generally no prospect of double taxation. The BVI is subject to certain double tax treaties.

6. Is there a wealth tax and, if so, which factors bring an individual within the scope of that tax, at what rate or rates is it charged, and when must tax returns be submitted and tax paid?

There is no wealth tax in the BVI.

7. Is tax charged on death or on gifts by individuals and, if so, which factors cause the tax to apply, when must a tax return be submitted, and at what rate, by whom and when must the tax be paid?

There are no BVI estate duties, inheritance taxes or gift taxes, irrespective of the place of residence or domicile of the deceased or beneficiary of an estate, or of the donor or donee of a gift or the situs of the assets. There is however stamp duty of US$5 payable on the transfer of land as a gift of natural love and affection to a 'belonger' (see question 10 below for a discussion of the concept of 'belonger') in the BVI. If title to BVI real property is acquired by way of gift or inheritance, a licence is required in order for non-belongers to hold that real property and stamp duty will be payable on any such transfer.

8. Are tax reliefs available on gifts (either during the donor's lifetime or on death) to a spouse, civil partner, or to any other relation, or of particular kinds of assets (eg business or agricultural assets), and how do any such reliefs apply?

As mentioned, there are no estate duties, inheritance taxes or gift taxes in the BVI. Accordingly, there is no scope for such tax reliefs.

9. Do the tax laws encourage gifts (either during the donor's lifetime or on death) to a charity, public foundation or similar entity, and how do the relevant tax rules apply?

As mentioned, there are no estate duties, inheritance taxes or gift taxes in the BVI and therefore there are no incentives to encourage gifts during a person's lifetime or on their death.

10. How is real property situated in the jurisdiction taxed, in particular where it is owned by an individual who has no connection with the jurisdiction other than ownership of property there?

Stamp duty is payable in connection with the acquisition and disposal of interests in real estate and land or shares in companies which own (directly or indirectly) real estate and land in the BVI. Stamp duty on transfers of freehold property is currently assessed at 4 per cent for belongers or 12 per cent for non-belongers on either the purchase consideration or the market value of the property, whichever is higher. This applies whether the property is held directly or via a corporate vehicle. There is also a recently introduced exemption for first time buyers with belonger status.

The concept of belonging has a complicated meaning under BVI law but, broadly, refers to people of BVI ancestry, or those who have been granted "belongership" through marriage or long residence. It is not synonymous with citizenship and a person can be a belonger without being a citizen and vice versa.

Similarly, a non-belonger company is any company incorporated outside the BVI or any company incorporated in the BVI in which any one of the directors is a non-belonger or where anyone of its shareholders, being a non-belonger, holds more than one-third of its shares. Companies under the control of non-belongers require a licence to hold land.

Stamp duty is payable on instruments as opposed to transactions. Unless an instrument that is stampable has been duly stamped, it cannot be admitted into evidence at court (and will thus be unenforceable) or registered at the Land Registry.

In addition, land and property tax is payable on the assessed value of every house and every acre of land in the BVI. The annual rates of land tax vary between landowners who are belongers and non-belongers. Land tax for non-belongers is US$50 per half acre or less, US$150 for more than a half-acre but less than an acre and any additional acre will be taxed at an additional US$50 per year (the rates are lower for belongers). For leasehold property non-belongers pay 1.5 % of the purchase price plus the first 20 years of rent (for belongers the rate is 1%). House tax is assessed at 1.5% of the annual rentable value of the house and applies to both belongers and non-belongers alike.

11. Does your jurisdiction have any specific rules in relation to the taxation of digital assets?

There is no taxation of digital assets in the BVI.

12. Are taxes other than those described above imposed on individuals and, if so, how do they apply?

Except as set out above, there are no material forms of direct taxation applicable to individuals in the BVI.

Indirect forms of tax include customs duties, cheque duty, tourist taxes and charter duties. There are nominal stamp duties payable on various instruments (such as bills of sale, charterparties, bills of lading etc.).

13. Is there an advantageous tax regime for individuals who have recently arrived in or are only partially connected with the jurisdiction?

Putting to one side tax neutrality with respect to income, capital gains and inheritance/estate/gift taxes, there are no other advantageous tax regimes for new arrivals or those only partially connected with the jurisdiction.

Individuals can avail themselves of the BVI revenue law regime upon arrival in the jurisdiction or, if resident in a foreign jurisdiction, through the use of BVI law structures. It should be noted that such individuals may still be subject to tax in their home jurisdiction.

14. What steps might an individual be advised to consider before establishing residence in (or becoming otherwise connected for tax purposes with) the jurisdiction?

To the extent that an individual intends to acquire BVI situs land or real estate, they should seek advice on whether they can avail themselves of 'belonger' status, as higher rates of stamp duty and property taxes will otherwise apply. Non-belongers, which includes both foreign companies as well as BVI companies owned or controlled by non-belongers, also require a license to hold property in the BVI (§7).

Individuals who will, or are likely to, become domiciled in the BVI should also give consideration to appropriate estate planning, including making a BVI will (§20).

15. Once an individual has left (and is no longer connected for tax purposes with) the jurisdiction, does the jurisdiction charge any form of exit tax or retain taxing rights over the individual's directly held assets or structures which they created or have an interest in?

There are no forms of exit tax and the jurisdiction does not retain taxing rights over the individual's directly held assets or structures which they created or have an interest in.

16. What are the main rules of succession, and what are the scope and effect of any rules of forced heirship?

Succession to movable property situated in the BVI is governed by the deceased individual's domiciliary law, and succession to immovable property situated in the BVI is governed by the lex situs. There is no forced heirship regime in the BVI and persons who die domiciled in the BVI have complete freedom of testamentary disposition; where such persons die intestate there are rules for intestate succession that will apply where the deceased individual was domiciled in the BVI. For deceased individuals not domiciled in the BVI leaving movable property in the BVI, under BVI conflicts rules any forced heirship regime applicable to the deceased individual under his domiciliary law may ultimately be enforced in the BVI.

The use of BVI trusts can limit the impact of foreign forced heirship regimes given the robust firewall provisions set out in the Trustee Act.

According to those provisions, no rule relating to inheritance or succession of the law of domicile of a person shall affect the transfer or disposition of personal property into a trust or otherwise affect the validity of such a trust.

In relation to lifetime transfers into trusts governed by BVI law, there is a comprehensive set of conflict of laws rules designed to prevent a challenge to the validity of a trust on forced heirship grounds.

An heirship right under foreign law does not affect the rights of ownership of BVI property subject to a BVI law governed trust. Additionally, heirship rights conferred by foreign law shall not constitute a person a creditor for the purposes of section 81 Conveyancing and Law of Property Act (pursuant to which every conveyance of property made with intent to defraud creditors shall be voidable at the instance of any person thereby prejudiced).

17. Is there a special regime for matrimonial property or the property of a civil partnership, and how does that regime affect succession?

The BVI does not have any community of property or matrimonial property regime (although the BVI courts have wide powers regarding the division of property between parties on divorce where it has jurisdiction over the marriage).

Civil partnerships are not currently recognised under domestic BVI law.

18. What factors cause the succession law of the jurisdiction to apply on the death of an individual?

Under applicable conflict of laws rules, the law governing succession of a deceased person's estate depends on the nature of the assets. In the case of immoveable property (i.e. real estate), it is the law of the jurisdiction where the assets are situated (i.e. the lex situs). In the case of movable property (which has recently been held by the Privy Council to include shares in a BVI company), it is the law of the deceased's domicile at the time of their death.

19. How does the jurisdiction deal with conflict between its succession laws and those of another jurisdiction with which the deceased was connected or in which the deceased owned property?

The Convention on the Conflicts of Laws Relating to the Form of Testamentary Dispositions of 1961 does not yet form part of the domestic law of the BVI, though it has evidently been extended to the BVI as a matter of public international law. As such, the starting point for resolving such conflicts would be the domestic common law rules of private international law developed by the English and BVI courts. To the extent that such common law rules can be applied consistently with the 1961 Convention, it is likely that the courts would seek to do so.

The doctrine of renvoi will apply in relation to succession to immovable property in accordance with English common law conflict of law principles.

20. In what circumstances should an individual make a Will, what are the consequences of dying without having made a Will, and what are the formal requirements for making a Will?

Individuals who are domiciled in the BVI and those who are not domiciled in the BVI but personally own BVI situs immovable assets (real estate) should consider making a separate will governed by BVI law to dispose of such assets and to facilitate the probate process.

The formal requirements for validity of a BVI will are that the will must be: (i) in writing; (ii) signed by the testator in the presence of two witnesses present at the same time, who must also sign in the testator's presence; and (iii) the testator must intend by his or her signature to give effect to the will.

For persons dying domiciled in a foreign jurisdiction, the intestacy rules governing their BVI movable assets are those of their jurisdiction of domicile.

For persons dying intestate domiciled in the BVI and/or holding immovable BVI assets, the residuary estate shall be distributed according to the intestacy rules set out in the BVI Intestate Estates Act.

It is not possible for beneficiaries to challenge the adequacy of the provision made for them under the intestacy rules.

21. How is the estate of a deceased individual administered and who is responsible for collecting in assets, paying debts, and distributing to beneficiaries?

The personal representative or representatives (PR) appointed under a BVI grant of representation (or a foreign grant that has been re-sealed) has the sole right of, and responsibility for, administering a deceased person's BVI situs estate. If foreign property is disposed of by the BVI will, separate probate applications will be needed in each of the jurisdictions in which property disposed of by the BVI will is situated.

A grant of probate or letters of administration (or a re-sealed foreign grant) is required in order to establish title to the estate and allow the PR to collect in the assets (except for assets that will vest separately, for example, by survivorship in the case of joint tenancies).

The powers and duties of the PR are determined under BVI law (including its conflict of laws rules) and include gathering in the deceased's assets, paying or making due provision for the estate's worldwide liabilities out of the BVI situs estate and distributing the remaining assets to the beneficiaries entitled to them under and in accordance with the applicable succession law (which may be a system of law other than that of the BVI).

22. Do the laws of your jurisdiction allow individuals to create trusts, private foundations, family companies, family partnerships or similar structures to hold, administer and regulate succession to private family wealth and, if so, which structures are most commonly or advantageously used?

A range of trusts may be established in the BVI, including discretionary trusts, fixed interest in possession trusts, reserved powers trusts and charitable purpose trusts.

In addition, non-charitable purpose trusts can be established to benefit persons and/or achieve or further any lawful purposes, whether charitable or not, provided they are neither immoral nor contrary to public policy. These trusts must appoint an enforcer who has exclusive standing to enforce the purpose for which the trust was established and can be particularly useful to create dynastic trusts which exist indefinitely (as purpose trusts are not subject to the rule against perpetuities), to create orphan holding structures (for example, to hold shares of a private trust company), or for philanthropic or impact investing (but where these might not qualify as strictly charitable purposes).

There is a special regime under the Virgin Islands Special Trust Act 2003 (VISTA), which may apply to all types of BVI trust. The VISTA legislation enables a settlor to create a trust holding shares in a BVI incorporated company under which the trustee may be disengaged from managerial responsibility in relation to the company's affairs, thereby leaving greater control to the settlor or his or her nominees to run the company as they see fit. An appropriate use of VISTA can also provide a vehicle that can do away with the need for obtaining a grant of probate in the BVI upon the death of an owner of BVI shares, whilst at the same time allowing the individual a degree of management and control of the company after having divested himself of such ownership.

Private Trust Companies (PTCs) are another attractive vehicle used to act as trustees of private family trusts. This type of structure enables a greater degree of control by the settlor or other family members over the administration of the trust and specific investment objectives (for example to engage in more speculative investments). They are often favoured by settlors from civil law jurisdictions who may be more apprehensive about transferring their wealth to an independent third party. Rather than holding the shares in the PTC personally, however, a common structuring mechanism for succession planning purposes is for the PTC shares to be held in a VISTA trust.

There is no legislative provision for the establishment of foundations under BVI law.

23. How are these structures constituted and what are the main rules that govern them?

The principal legislation applicable to BVI trusts is the Trustee Act (as revised), and trustees are subject to the jurisdiction of the BVI courts. In 2021 an amendment to the Trustee Act introduced (among other things) new provisions resulting in (i) the courts having wider power to set aside invalid variations under a fiduciary power, (ii) strengthening the 'firewall' protections and (iii) amending the reserved powers legislation.

Most trusts (especially in the context of financial planning of high net worth individuals and families) are created in writing. This may be either by way of a settlement signed by both the settlor and the trustee, or by a declaration of trust signed by the trustee alone.

Trustees are under both common law and statutory duties to keep proper records and accounts of their trusteeship and with respect to the trust fund of any trust they administer.

24. What are the registration requirements for these structures and what information needs to be made available to the relevant authorities? To what extent is that information publicly available?

The BVI has recently enacted an amendment to the Trustee Act to introduce a register of trusts. The register will not be publicly available. Information regarding BVI corporate trustees must be supplied in addition to the following information for each beneficial owner (as defined in the amended legislation): 1) Name; 2) Residential Address; 3) Date of Birth; and 4) Nationality.

25. How are such structures and their settlors, founders, trustees, directors and beneficiaries treated for tax purposes?

BVI law trusts are generally exempt from taxation. However, the statutory exemption does not apply to distributions to beneficiaries who are resident in the BVI or to BVI trusts which own land or carry on business in the BVI. As the BVI is zero-rated for income tax and does not have any other applicable taxes, this provision has no practical implication at present.

A nominal trust duty is payable on the establishment of a new trust.

Professional services providers acting as trustees of a trust will be subject to payroll tax to the extent they have employees rendering services to the trustee wholly or mainly in the BVI. However, these charges are imposed on the trustee in its personal capacity as an employer and cannot be satisfied from the assets of the trust.

26. Are foreign trusts, private foundations, etc recognised?

The Convention on the Law Applicable to Trusts and their Recognition of 1985 (Hague Trusts Convention) has been extended by the UK government to the BVI and forms part of BVI domestic law. As a general rule, most trusts established under the laws of foreign jurisdictions created for the benefit of foreign persons will be recognised by the BVI courts.

27. How are such foreign structures and their settlors, founders, trustees, directors and beneficiaries treated for tax purposes?

No tax is applicable to such foreign structures.

28. To what extent can trusts, private foundations, etc be used to shelter assets from the creditors of a settlor or beneficiary of the structure?

A BVI discretionary trust can provide substantial asset protection, particularly in view of the firewall legislation. It should be noted that BVI law makes provision in various ways for transfers of assets into trust with the intention of defrauding creditors or defeating creditor claims (i.e. existing or contingent creditors of the settlor existing at the time the trust was created) to be avoided at the instance of the prejudiced creditor subject to satisfying various conditions.

Trusts are also commonly employed to hold assets in a secure and stable political environment, to hold trust assets located in a jurisdiction which does not recognise the concept of a trust (when used in conjunction with a company structure), or to safeguard against political or strategic risks.

29. What provision can be made to hold and manage assets for minor children and grandchildren?

The legal age of majority is 18 years for BVI domiciliaries. Although there is no general bar on a minor's owning assets (other than land), it may impede their transferability and it is therefore generally not advisable for commercially valuable assets to be held in the name of minors. Assets can instead be held by trustees on a minor's behalf, either on express lifetime or testamentary trusts or on the statutory trusts which may arise on intestacy.

30. Are individuals advised to create documents or take other steps in view of their possible mental incapacity and, if so, what are the main features of the advisable arrangements?

The authority given to an attorney under powers of attorney will cease on the donor's death or incapacity. BVI law does not currently provide for general, lasting or enduring powers of attorney. However, the provisions of the Mental Health Act 2014 apply to persons who are incapable of managing and/or administering their property and affairs by reason of mental disorder.

Other measures that a person might consider taking in view of possible mental incapacity include inserting appropriate provisions in a BVI company's memorandum and articles (for example, to deal with their automatic resignation from the board) and establishing inter vivos trusts to hold assets for their benefit.

31. What forms of charitable trust, charitable company, or philanthropic foundation are commonly established by individuals, and how is this done?

Charitable trusts can be established under BVI law to create a charitable fund or to make provision for existing charitable institutions or purposes. Charities are commonly structured through the use of companies (usually limited by guarantee), unincorporated associations or trusts. In the case of charitable trusts, the categories of charitable purposes recognised by BVI law are the relief of poverty, the advancement of religion or education or other purposes that benefit the community as a whole (including where the benefit is for the public or a section of the public outside of the BVI).

The regulatory framework for certain charities and non-profit organisations operating predominantly in the BVI is provided by the Non-Profit Organisations Act 2012 (as revised). It applies to organisations which operate primarily in the BVI. Relevant organisations must be registered, adhere to minimum establishment and annual reporting requirements and remain subject to supervision and monitoring.

32. What is the jurisdiction's approach to information sharing with other jurisdictions?

The BVI has entered into various intergovernmental agreements for the automatic exchange of financial account information to allow for ease of compliance with FATCA and CRS, and its anti-money laundering regime provides for mutual legal assistance in respect of valid requests from established/recognised foreign authorities and agencies. The BVI is also party to a number of Tax Information Exchange Agreements (TIEAs).

33. What important legislative changes do you anticipate so far as they affect your advice to private clients?

Recent legislative developments have been dominated by the international policy landscape focussed largely on transparency and regulation, such as the disclosure of beneficial ownership information and automatic exchange of information regimes. The BVI Business Companies (Amendment) Act is due to come into force imminently. The amendments include (inter alia) changes to the beneficial ownership regime in the jurisdiction. The amended legislation envisages that public access may be granted to beneficial ownership information relating to certain BVI entities in the future.

While there are no legislative proposals currently under consultation, several areas are long overdue reform.

For instance, there have been calls for a wholesale repeal of the Stamp Act in favour of a comprehensive system of land transfer tax. The Stamp Act has repeatedly been amended in the BVI (and each time provision is made for the amendment in a separate statute, there being no official consolidation of the Act). There has also been fragmentation of taxes that would otherwise have been regarded as stamp duty but have been re-characterised as another form of documentary tax (for example, trust duty).

Similarly, a law giving effect in domestic law to the Hague Testamentary Dispositions Convention could be enacted to simplify the conflict of laws provisions concerning the law of wills and testamentary dispositions in the BVI.

Finally, it remains to be seen whether the BVI will enact civil partnership legislation, as some of its neighbours in the region have done.
